Annotation. This thesis discusses the use of modern methods of teaching verb forms in Uzbek language lessons, that is, conducting lessons using innovative technologies. In this way, it is discussed how to increase students' interest and increase the effectiveness of the lesson.

Today's hectic era requires everyone to study diligently, learn science and craft from childhood. Based on this requirement, a unique education system was created in our country: the Law "On Education" and the "National Program for Personnel Training" were adopted. They, along with other areas of education, also allocate a special place to native language education.

As is known, currently, each national language, in addition to traditional methods, is effectively using modern information and pedagogical and technological tools.

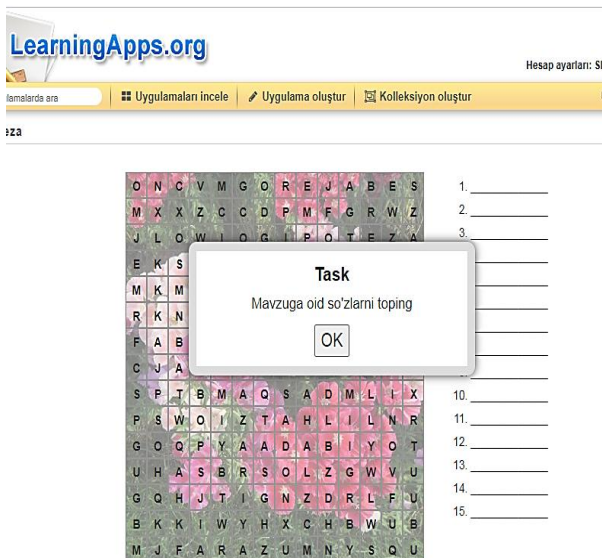

Including, in Uzbek language lessons, it has become a requirement of the time for each teacher to conduct lessons in an innovative way. This encourages teachers to fully master the use of technology.

Interactive methods are based on the activity of each learner participating in the educational process, free and independent thinking. When using these methods, learning becomes more interesting. When using interactive methods, the skills and qualifications of independent work increase. As is known, there are many types of interactive methods today, the most effective of which are: "keys-study", "brainstorming", "cluster" methods, games developed in the "philippity", "joyteka", "learning apps" applications.

The use of modern methods in Uzbek language lessons also has a good effect on developing students' independent thinking skills. One of the effective methods for teaching verb forms is various types of questions and puzzles created through the “learning apps” program. In addition, various game forms in the “Filippity” program help to understand and consolidate the topic more broadly. It is also possible to control students’ homework through the random in the “Filippity” program, that is, the random itself selects the student. This helps to prevent disagreements among students.

After the topic is fully covered, it will be effective to use the game method developed in the “Joyteka” program to reinforce it. The condition of this game is that the door to a locked room is opened by solving questions and tasks. The questions are hidden inside the room, and students find them by opening the room's equipment. If one question is answered incorrectly, the door remains locked without opening.

These methods encourage each student to be alert, resourceful, and active in the lesson, increasing their interest in the Uzbek language. At the same time, it becomes clear to what extent the students have mastered the topic. Through this lesson, the teacher not only effectively covers his topic, but also teaches students to use information technology tools.

In conclusion, the development of new methods of providing knowledge to the growing younger generation, their recommendations for the educational process are one of the urgent issues. Education does not stand still, it is in the process of constant improvement. Therefore, every teacher must interest students in the lesson during the lesson, increase the effectiveness of the lesson. This requires the teacher to conduct lessons in an interactive manner, using modern information resources.
