Drug addiction and chronic alcoholism are serious social problems that threaten not only individual health, but also public safety, economic stability, and social order. These diseases spread rapidly among the most vulnerable segments of society, especially young people, and negatively affect the social environment. Therefore, it is necessary to improve the preventive measures of the prevention inspector against drug addiction and alcoholism. This article examines the main directions for the effective performance of the tasks of the prevention inspector and the improvement of preventive measures.

The role of the prevention inspector in the prevention of drug addiction and alcoholism:

Prophylactic inspectors play an important role in improving the social environment in society, preventing offenses, and promoting a healthy lifestyle. They should be directly involved in the prevention of such problems as drug addiction and alcoholism. Preventive work is carried out in schools, medical institutions, social organizations, and public places.

Prophylactic inspectors conduct various awareness campaigns to inform the population about the harmful effects of drug addiction and alcoholism. Through seminars, training sessions, lectures, and social advertising, it is necessary to provide information about the social, economic, and psychological consequences of such negative habits. It is necessary to involve the community and families in encouraging young people to actively participate in the fight against drug addiction and alcoholism.

It is necessary to expand rehabilitation centers and create a high-quality treatment system for persons suffering from drug addiction and alcoholism. In the fight against drug addiction and alcoholism, prevention inspectors, in cooperation with the healthcare system, are involved in the effective organization of psychotherapeutic, medical, and social assistance, treatment, and rehabilitation processes. Youth should be the main goal in carrying out preventive measures against drug addiction and alcoholism. It is necessary to introduce educational programs for the prevention of drug addiction and alcoholism in schools and universities, organize sports and cultural events, and strengthen educational work against negative habits. It is important to cooperate with parents and teachers in protecting young people from such harmful habits.

Prevention inspectors need to strengthen monitoring and control in preventing the spread of drug addiction and alcoholism, as well as in their detection. This process involves identifying violations, monitoring, and controlling drug trafficking. It is also possible to carry out preventive work more effectively in cooperation with local law enforcement agencies. It is necessary to develop a network of social services for people suffering from drug addiction and alcoholism. Prophylactic inspectors must create an effective system for combating negative habits in society in cooperation with charitable organizations, rehabilitation centers, and social institutions. Many, especially families struggling with drug addiction and alcoholism, feel that they need more help in combating these problems. The negative consequences of drug and alcohol abuse are felt not only by themselves, but also by those around them. The population, in particular families and vulnerable segments of society, face difficulties in solving these problems individually. In many cases, such individuals face difficulties in receiving social assistance and psychological support. Preventive measures carried out by prevention inspectors give hope to the population, but in many cases, it takes time and resources to feel the effectiveness of these measures. The population, especially family members suffering from drug addiction and alcoholism, understands the long and complexity of the treatment and rehabilitation process. These processes often take a long time, and many people suffer from a lack of resources, personal anxieties, and misunderstandings.

Conclusion: Drug addiction and chronic alcoholism are one of the serious social problems of society, which negatively affects not only individual health, but also the safety, economic stability, and social relations of society as a whole. In the effective fight against these problems, the role of the prevention inspector is extremely important. Prophylactic inspectors, through their activities, must fulfill such tasks as preventing drug addiction and alcoholism, preventing the spread of these diseases, and strengthening the social protection system. Promotion and awareness-raising: Educational and awareness-raising work should be carried out regularly to raise awareness among the population, especially young people, about the harmful effects of drug addiction and alcoholism. It is necessary to bring these topics to the attention of the general public through trainings and seminars held in schools, universities, medical and social institutions. It is necessary to create special treatment and rehabilitation centers for persons suffering from drug addiction and alcoholism, to create systems that will help them reintegrate into society. This should be done by supporting psychological and medical support.

Prevention of negative habits among young people: To protect young people from the negative consequences of drug addiction and alcoholism, it is necessary to form their activities and create opportunities for them to spend more time in sports, culture, and creative fields. It is also necessary to strengthen educational work in cooperation with parents and teachers. It is necessary to introduce an effective monitoring system and strengthen control over the spread of drug addiction and alcoholism. Within the framework of this system, it is important to cooperate with law enforcement agencies to prevent drug trafficking and alcohol abuse. Creating a support network in society: The success of the fight against drug addiction and alcoholism depends on the united actions of society. It is necessary to create an effective system for combating negative habits in cooperation with social services, charitable organizations, and rehabilitation centers. In the fight against drug addiction and alcoholism, it is necessary to strengthen legal measures and tighten legislation. The role of law enforcement agencies is crucial in preventing the illegal production and distribution of drugs.

It can be concluded that the improvement of special preventive measures of the prevention inspector in the prevention of drug addiction and alcoholism contributes to the reduction of negative habits in society, the formation of a healthy lifestyle among young people, and ensuring social stability. These measures serve not only to prevent drug addiction and alcoholism, but also to strengthen the health and stability of society as a whole. For this, it is necessary to carry out promotional work, improve the rehabilitation system, strengthen monitoring and control, and create a support network in society. Furthermore, strengthening legal and legislative measures will be an important step towards solving this problem.

The number of students and ordinary people in the above problematic situation is countless. We cannot include the status of each of them in the article. We've brought up only the most important one for you to better understand.
